

The table below provides categories of formulas for premature and term infants, as well as children older than 12 months of age. Formulas within each category are comparable and safe to substitute for each other, in case of shortages. Any substitution should only be done under the recommendation and supervision of a healthcare professional.

Please be aware that formula mixing instructions, including proper ratios of powder to water, can vary significantly. Follow all mixing instructions. Use the specific scoop that comes within each can.

NASPGHAN does not endorse any specific formulas, nor the general use of formula over possible use of breast milk as the optimal source of infant nutrition. NASPGHAN would also note that toddler formula is not necessary for otherwise healthy children >12 months of life.

* Formulas in this standard formula/intact and/or partially hydrolyzed cow's milk protein category are safe to substitute for each other in case of national shortages. All formulas listed are FDA reviewed and meet US Government and American Academy of Pediatrics (AAP) nutritional standards, with variations in ingredients, including but not limited to macro (protein, carbohydrate, fat) and micro (vitamin, mineral) blends, subtypes and/or added levels.

 Calories per ounce can vary

†† Formulas in this FDA-reviewed standard formula/intact protein category do not meet USA definitions of "iron fortified" (defined as an iron level >1mg/100 calories) but do contain iron levels within the FDA required range of 0.3-3.0mg/100 calories.

€€ Denotes FDA-reviewed goat milk intact protein formulas that should be safe to interchange with cow milk intact protein formulas. Goat milk intact protein formulas should NOT be used in infants with milk protein allergy and are not interchangeable with either extensively hydrolyzed/hypoallergenic or amino-acid based formulas.
